SYNOD UPDATE

Cardinal Jean-Claude Hollerich, the Synod's Relator General, presents the third module for consideration by participants in the General Assembly. Participants are taking up the question of "Co-responsibility in Mission: How can we better share gifts and tasks in the service of the Gospel... Our theme is, therefore, mission," Cardinal Jean-Claude Hollerich said Friday morning in his presentation on the third "module" of the work of the General Assembly of the Synod of Bishops. The Synod's Relator General highlighted the fact that the call to mission extends to all the members of the Church, while reminding his listeners that mission is intrinsically connected to the earlier topic of "communion". The theme of mission, he said, "continually emerged in the work of the second module: communion is not closed in on itself but is impelled towards mission; at the same time, the purpose of mission is precisely to extend the scope of communion." He noted that the example of the outreach to the "digital continent" can illustrate the idea of mission in a synodal context. The digital world is a new "mission territory" that must be evangelized by those who inhabit it. This, he said, likewise illustrates the concept of "co-responsibility": "All the baptized are called and have the right to participate in the mission of the Church, all have an irreplaceable contribution to make. What is true for the digital continent is also true for other aspects of the mission of the Church." Cardinal Hollerich went on to briefly speak about the five worksheets that will be addressed by the small groups, with each group focusing on a single topic. These include deepening the meaning and content of mission; ministeriality; the role of women; the relation between ordained and baptismal ministry; and the ministry of Bishops. www.vaticannews.va
